Musical Synopsis

Act 1

Ren McCormack, a Chicago teenager, dances away his work stress at a club before revealing to friends he's moving to the small town of Bomont with his mother due to financial troubles. In Bomont, Ren and his mother attend church led by the strict minister Shaw Moore. After a sermon against "rock and roll," Moore's daughter Ariel sneaks off to see her boyfriend Chuck, but Moore arrives and catches them together, disapprovingly.

Ren's first day at school brings him face-to-face with Willard Hewitt, who initially confronts Ren but quickly becomes his friend. Ren shares that he's passionate about dancing, a hobby he brought with him from Chicago, and even breaks into dance at school, which provokes the principal because dancing is prohibited in Bomont. Willard stands up for Ren, explaining that he's new to town. Rusty commends Willard for defending Ren, then she and her friends inform Ren of the local law banning dancing—a rule put in place following a fatal accident involving the reverend's son. They caution Ren to stay out of the spotlight to avoid more trouble.

Ariel returns home but is ignored by Shaw, who is upset about her relationship with Chuck Cranston. After Ariel leaves in frustration, Moore and Vi argue about her, with Shaw dismissing Vi's reassurances before leaving to write his sermon. Ethel and Vi sympathize over the suspicion Ren faces as a newcomer, and when Ariel joins them, they share their frustrations about not being heard by others set in their ways.

After school, Ariel, Rusty, and friends do homework at Burger Blast while Ren works in a waiter's uniform and roller skates. Ariel flirts with Ren; Willard warns him about Chuck Cranston's jealousy. Ren asks Willard about Rusty, who he finds attractive but overly talkative. Ariel tells her friends she wants a decent guy. Chuck arrives angry and yells at Ariel, but Ren, Willard, and restaurant owner Betty Blast step in to stop the confrontation.

After Ren gets off work, Ariel takes him to her secret place beneath the train tracks where she discusses her hatred of Bomont. Unbeknownst to them, Chuck witnesses the pair together.

Ren walks Ariel home, surprising Moore and Vi who thought she was in her room. Shaw is displeased with Ariel's actions, and Ren accidentally offends him, prompting Shaw's friends to leave abruptly. Shaw orders Ariel to stop seeing Ren, but she protests, feeling imprisoned. After his daughter and wife leave angrily, Shaw feels guilty and questions whether he is being fair as both a preacher and a father.

Ren shows up late to gym class the next day with Ariel and Willard, explaining that Chuck attacked him, but their teacher pays no attention. Frustrated by Bomont's strict rules, Ren misses the lively dance clubs in Chicago. After Willard cracks a joke about dancing, Ren is inspired to suggest a school dance as a way to bring teens together and defy Moore's authority. Although Willard finds the plan outlandish, Ren presents his proposal to other students and gets them on board. Moore, who originally prohibited dancing, remains determined to prevent it from happening.

Act 2

Ren, Ariel, Willard, and Rusty visit a nearby town's dance hall with a country band. Rusty wants to dance with Willard, but he avoids it and admits to Ren at the bar that he can't dance. After cowboys mock Willard, Rusty defends him and confesses her feelings. As Rusty sings, Ren teaches Willard to dance, and Willard impresses everyone with his newfound skills.

Chuck Cranston arrives at the Moores' home, making Vi and Shaw anxious when he says Ariel isn't where they expected. After Chuck leaves, Ariel returns, pretending to have been studying, but her parents confront her. An argument follows between Shaw and Ariel until Vi steps in and consoles Shaw, noting his reprimand isn't logical.

Ren, Willard, and their friends work on presenting their idea to the town council. Ren feels discouraged, but Willard encourages him not to give up. When Ariel arrives with a black eye from Chuck, Ren comforts her at the train station. Ariel reveals her brother's death led to the dancing ban and gives Ren a Bible with marked passages for his case. There, Ren and Ariel realize they love each other.

At the town council meeting, Ren argues that dancing is mentioned in the Bible and shouldn't be banned. Despite some support, the council rejects the motion.

After the meeting, Ethel tells Ren that Shaw's votes were assured and advises him to speak directly with Shaw. Ren visits the pastor, urging him not to let his grief affect the whole town. They argue but recognize their shared experience of loss. Ren leaves, and Moore is left reconsidering his position.

At the next service, Shaw announces that the teenagers can hold a dance, which excites them all. Ren asks Ariel, and Willard invites Rusty. After everyone leaves, Shaw admits past mistakes to Vi and expresses his love. Ultimately, Moore, his wife, and the townspeople attend the big dance.

Part leader, part problem-solver, and all teamwork, she keeps the show running smoother than a quick scene change. As stage manager and student director, she juggles schedules, wrangles props, and somehow makes backstage magic look effortless. Whether she's calling cues or saving the day with a roll of gaff tape, Jensen helps keep the whole production shining.

Another show-stopping performance from our behind-the-scenes superstar. You've earned a standing ovation from your stage crew: Nana, Oma, Aunt Kelly, Uncle Bob, Megan, Katelyn and Lauren, Aunt Lisa and Uncle Greg, Uncle Don and Uncle Kevin

Aaron,

Your entry into the theater began as a little boy, dressing up with your sister, making videos, dancing, and singing to entertain anyone around. You have amused your family, with Gianna at the helm, to add your own flavor to any production.

The Little Mermaid dancing was electric, in the number “Under the Sea” as you brought liveliness to your moves. You took on Damian, in Mean Girls, and were whoa, whoa, whoa, blowing us all away with your hidden talents. You helped fight evil in The Descendants with a wicked schedule during the show!

You have made friends, found the stage bug, and made your family proud. ♥ We are so incredibly proud of you, Aaron. The time to dance is now!

Love,

Congrats, Maya, on your first of many high school musicals!

We took you to every GLHS show since you were little, we knew then you were destined for that stage!
As your namesake Maya Angelou said,

"The desire to reach for the stars is ambitious. The desire to reach hearts is wise."

You've always touched hearts — and tonight is no exception.

Love, Mom, Dad, Xavier & Papi

Dearest Lillian - The world has been your stage since you made your grand entrance 17 years ago! You have captivated, entertained and amazed us with your many talents, your sense of humor and your courage to stand out on stage. You have worked so hard since your early days of community theater, dance, gymnastics, multiple musicals, and now as a lead in a high school production! There are no words to capture how incredibly proud we are of you! Keep shining bright.

Love, Mom and Dad

Congratulations, Audrey!! This picture takes us back to where your passion for performing first began — we've loved watching you grow in to the incredible performer you are today. Watching you follow your dreams and blossom has been one of our life's greatest joys. We love you more than words can say. Love, Mom and Dad

If getting knocked by a door didn't stop you, nothing will. Shine on, Aidyn! When the line disappears but the star still shines—that's talent, Xander!

Love, Mom, Brandon, Easton, Dad, Michele, Logan, and Lucas

Jensen,

It feels like just yesterday you were our little Munchkin, full of wonder, skipping down the Yellow Brick Road. From there, to the sun-soaked shores of Mamma Mia! and Under the Sea in The Little Mermaid.

But the moment that stays with us most wasn't in the spotlight. It was the night you told us you wanted to step behind the curtain—to take on new roles: tech crew, stage manager, student director. We asked why. And you simply said, "Because it makes me happy to help others do and look their best." In just a few words, you revealed the kindness, selflessness, and quiet strength that make you so special.

You've given your heart to GLHS Musical Theatre—lifting others up, solving problems no one ever sees, making every show shine a little brighter. And in doing so, you've shown us what true leadership and love look like.

We are endlessly proud of you, and always in awe of the light you bring to the world.

*With all our love,
Mom, Dad and Maggie*
